Rabies & Wild Animals

Rabies is found in warm-blooded animals, frequently in raccoons, foxes, skunks, and bats. All warm-blooded animal bites are considered for possible exposure to the rabies virus. For this reason, it has been mandated by the New York State Public Health Law that every animal bite be reported to the Wayne County Public Health Department. A bite by any animal should be thoroughly cleansed with soap and water as soon as possible, and medical attention should be sought immediately. The biting animal must be captured if it is a stray cat, dog, or wild animal (if it can be identified).

If your pet fights with a known or suspected rabies animal, the rabies virus in that animal's saliva may remain alive on a pet's skin or in its mouth for up to three hours. If it is necessary to handle that pet during this period, wear gloves. Wash the pet with soap and water. Call the Wayne County Health Department at (315)-946-5749 (weekdays 8 a.m. - 4 p.m.) or call 911

(after hours and weekends).

If you find yourself in need of wildlife rescue services other than those listed above, Kris King of Marion, NY can be reached at (315)-374-4542. Ms. King is a licensed wildlife rehabilitator. She is listed for information purposes only and is not an employee of the Village of Newark.
